Earth Friendly Products Celebrates Passage of California's Historic Ingredient Transparency Legislation

Senate Bill 258 is the first law in the U.S. to require disclosure of cleaning product ingredients directly on labels and online

Cypress, CA (October 16, 2017) – Earth Friendly Products®, the maker of ECOS™ environmentally friendly cleaning products, joined consumers across California as they celebrated the passage of the Cleaning Product Right to Know Act of 2017. The historic bill, which Governor Jerry Brown signed into law on Sunday, requires the disclosure of ingredients used in household and institutional cleaning products.

California Senate Bill SB 258, authored by Senator Ricardo Lara, will be the first law in the U.S. to require disclosure of ingredients directly on labels and online. The Cleaning Product Right to Know Act will provide millions of consumers and workers in California with the information they need to protect their health.

"Yesterday was truly a remarkable day, and we are so proud to be a part of the coalition of businesses, health advocates and workers' groups that came together to support this important legislation," said Kelly Vlahakis-Hanks, president and CEO of Earth Friendly Products.

"I applaud the Governor for signing SB 258 as it is an important step toward increasing transparency. This new law will enhance consumer protections for Californians by providing them with clear and vital information of what ingredients are contained in the products they are bringing into their homes or businesses," stated California Assemblymember Matt Dababneh. "I want to thank Kelly Vlahakis-Hanks and Earth Friendly Products for setting the stage for being transparent to California consumers and providing environmentally friendly cleaning products."

Earth Friendly Products has been a pioneer in safer cleaning products and ingredient transparency. Founded in 1967, the California-based company manufactures ECOS™ Laundry Detergent and over 200 other environmentally friendly cleaning products. Earth Friendly Products has disclosed its ingredients on its packaging and website for close to a decade.

"Everyone has a right to know what's in the products they bring into their home," said Vlahakis-Hanks. "Many of the chemicals in traditional cleaning products have been definitively linked to asthma, allergies, cancer and other serious health effects. Shoppers and workers in California will now have the information they need to protect their health."

Unlike retail cosmetics or packaged food, no federal requirements exist for disclosing ingredients in cleaning products, which means this law will set the standard for cleaning product ingredient disclosure, not just in California but across the nation.

The Cleaning Product Right to Know Act will require online listing of all intentionally added ingredients by January 1, 2020, and on-package disclosure by January 1, 2021, to give manufacturers time to reformulate their products and remove harmful chemicals. In addition, the label must indicate the presence of allergens in the product.

“Responsible companies like Earth Friendly Products have proven for years that being transparent with consumers is good business,” said David Levine, CEO and co-founder of the American Sustainable Business Council. “It’s encouraging that the California Governor and the Legislature have acknowledged that fact and worked with companies – big and small – along with NGO partners to reach a fair compromise on this legislation. This bill creates a model for the nation for transparency in cleaning product labeling.”

With a longstanding commitment to using sustainable ingredients that are safer for people, pets and the planet, Earth Friendly Products has made sustainability and ingredient transparency its top priority. “It’s our hope that this is the beginning of a nationwide effort to arm consumers and workers with the knowledge they need to help them protect themselves and their families.”
